élan ā-län' or ā-lā, n impetuosity; dash or style. — élan vital (ā-lā vē-tal; Bergson) the creative force responsible for the growth and evolution of organisms. [Fr]

elance i-läns', vt to throw as a lance. [Fr élancer] eland ē'land, n a S African antelope, resembling the elk in having a protuberance on the larynx. [Du, from Ger Elend (now Elen), from Lith élnis elk] elanet el'ə-net, n a kite of the genus Elanus. [Gr elanos a kite] elaphine el'ə-fīn, adj like or belonging to a red deer. [Gr elaphos stag]

Elaps ē'laps, n an American genus of snakes, also called Micrurus, the coral-snake; sometimes applied to a S African genus, also called Homorelaps, the garter-snake. [A form of ellops] elapse i-laps', vi to slip or glide away; (of time, or units of time) to pass silently. — n passing. [L ēlāpsus, ēlābī, from ē from, and lābī, lāpsus to slide] elasmobranch i-laz'mō-brangk, or -las', n any member of the Elasmobranch'ii, a class of fishes including sharks and skates which have a cartilaginous skeleton and plate-like gills. [Gr elasmos a beaten-metal plate, and branchia gills] elastic i-las'tik, or -läs', adj having a tendency or the ability to recover the original form or size after stretching, compression or deformation; springy or resilient; able to recover quickly a former state or condition, eg after a shock (fig); stretchy; flexible; capable of stretching to include a large number or amount (lit and fig); made of elastic. — n a string or ribbon woven with rubber strands. — n elas'tance (phys) the reciprocal of the capacity of a condenser, from its electromechanical analogy with a spring. — n elas'tase an enzyme found in the pancreatic juice that decomposes elastin. — adv elas'tically. — vt elas'ticate to make elastic. — adj elas'ticated. — n elasticity (el- or ēl-as-tis'i-ti) power of returning to its original form or size after stretching, compression or deformation; springiness, flexibility, resilience or stretchiness; power to recover from shock, depression, etc, or financial restraint. — vt elas'ticize or -ise (-ti-sīz) to make elastic. — n elas'ticness. — n elas'tin a protein, the chief constituent of elastic tissue. — n elas'tomer any rubber-like substance. — adj elastomeric (-mer'). — elastic band a narrow strip of rubber formed into a loop for holding objects together, etc (also called rubber band); elastic collision or scattering see under collide; elastic limit the greatest stress a material can be subjected to without permanent deformation; elastic tissue tissue having fibres with elastic quality, occurring esp in ligaments and tendons. [Late Gr elastikos, from elaunein to drive]

Elastoplast® i-last'ō-pläst or -plast, n a dressing for a wound, consisting of gauze on a backing of adhesive tape.

elate i-lāt', vt to raise the spirits of, cheer or exhilarate; to make exultant, proud or euphoric; to raise or exalt (obs). — adj (rare) lifted up; puffed up with success; exalted. — adj elāt'ed. — adv elāt'edly. — n elāt'edness. — n elā'tion pride resulting from success; exaltation, high spirits or euphoria. — adj ē'lative (gram) (of a noun case), expressing place 'from which', as eg in Finnish. — n the elative case. [L ēlātus, used as pa p of efferre, from ē from, and lātus carried] elater el'ə-tər, n an elastic filament aiding spore-dispersal in certain fungi, in liverworts and in horse-tails (bot); a skipjack beetle. — elaterite (i-lat'ər-īt) elastic bitumen, a rubber-like mineral resin. — n elatē'rium a substance contained in the juice of the fruit of the squirting cucumber, producing the purgative elat'erin. [Gr elatēr driver, from elaunein to drive] elbow el'bō, n the joint where the arm bends; the corresponding joint in vertebrates; the part of a sleeve which covers the elbow; any sharp turn or bend, eg in a road. — vt to push with the elbow, to jostle. — el'bow-chair an armchair; el'bow-grease (facetious) vigorous rubbing; hard work; elbow macaroni macaroni cut longer than usual, and with a pronounced bend; el'bow-room room to extend the elbows; space enough for moving or acting; freedom and scope. — at one's elbow close at hand, ready for use; bend, crook or lift the elbow to drink alcohol, esp too much; out at elbow wearing a ragged coat or threadbare, orig worn at the elbows; up to the elbows completely engrossed or involved. [OE elnboga; see ell[1] and bow[1] n and vt] elchi, eltchi or elchee el'chē or -chi, n an ambassador. [Turk ilchī]

eld eld, (archaic) n age; old age or senility; former times or antiquity. [OE eldo] elder[1] eld'ər, n a shrub or tree (Sambucus) of the Caprifoliaceae, related to honeysuckle, with pinnate leaves, small flowers (with a wheel-shaped corolla) and three-seeded fruits. — eld'erberry the acidulous purple-black drupaceous fruit of the elder; eld'er-gun a popgun made from a length of elder by removing the pith; eld'erberry wine a wine made from elderberries; elder-flower water a distilled water made from the flowers. [OE ellærn] elder[2] eld'ər, adj older; having lived a longer time; prior in origin. — n an older person; an ancestor; esp in primitive communities, a person advanced to the office of adviser or administrator on account of age; one of a class of office-bearers in the Presbyterian Church (presbyter of the New Testament). — n eld'erliness. — adj eld'erly rather old; bordering on old age. — n (with the) elderly people. — n eld'ership the state of being older; the office of an elder. — adj eld'est oldest. — Elder Brethren the governing members of Trinity House; elder or eldest hand in card-playing, the player on the dealer's left, who leads; elders' hours respectable hours, usually meaning not after 10pm; elder statesman a retired statesman consulted by the government; any administrator of age and experience; (in pl, with caps) a reactionary group of retired statesmen who exercised a power behind the throne in Japan. [OE eldra (W Sax ieldra, yldra) compar, and eldesta (W Sax ieldesta) superl of ald (W Sax eald) old] eldin el'din or elding el'ding (Northern), also (Scot) elding ēl'ding, n fuel. [ON elding, from eldr fire]

ELDO abbrev: European Launcher Development Organization (now ESA).

El Dorado or Eldorado el-də-rä'dō, the golden land or city imagined by the Spanish conquerors of America; any place where wealth is easily to be acquired. [Sp el the, and dorado, pa p of dorar to gild, from 'the gilded man', the king of the legendary city of Manoa who smeared himself with gold-dust; afterwards transferred to the city itself] eldritch el'(d)rich, (Scot) adj weird; uncanny. [Perh connected with elf]

Eleatic el-i-at'ik, adj belonging to Elea, a Greek city of Lower Italy, or to the school of philosophers connected with it, including Xenophanes, Parmenides and Zeno. — n a philosopher belonging to this school.

elec. or elect. abbrev: electric; electricity.

elecampane el-i-kam-pān', n a composite plant (Inula helenium) formerly much cultivated for its medicinal root; a sweet flavoured with an extract from the root. [L enula or inula campāna, field or Campanian inula] elect i-lekt', vt to choose in preference to other options; to select for any office or purpose; to select by vote. — adj chosen; taken by preference from among others; chosen for an office but not yet in it (almost always after the noun); in Christian doctrine, chosen by God for salvation (theol). — n (with the) those chosen or set apart, esp by God for salvation. — n electabil'ity. — adj elect'able. — n elec'tion (-shən) the act of electing or choosing; the public choice of a person for office, usu by the votes of a constituent body; free will; the exercise of God's sovereign will in the predetermination of certain persons to salvation (theol); those elected in this way (Bible). — vi electioneer' to labour to secure the election of a candidate. — n electioneer'er. — n and adj electioneer'ing. — adj elect'ive relating to, concerning, dependent on, or exerting the power of choice; optional. — n an optional subject of study (US); an elective placement with a hospital, or to study abroad, etc (med). — adv elect'ively. — n electiv'ity (ē- or e-). — n elect'or a person who elects; a person who has a vote at an election; in US a member of the electoral college; (usu with cap) the title formerly belonging to those princes and archbishops of the German empire who had the right to elect the Emperor. — fem elect'ress or elect'oress. — adj elect'oral or electō'rial (ē- or e-) relating to elections or to electors; consisting of electors. — n elect'orate the dignity or the territory of an elector; the body of electors. — n elect'orship. — electoral college in US, the body of people who elect the President and Vice-President, themselves elected by popular vote; any body of electors with a similar function; electoral roll or register the list of people in a particular area who are eligible to vote in local and general elections; electoral vote (US) the vote of the members of the electoral college. [L ēligere, ēlectum, from ē from, and legere to choose]

Electra complex i-lek'trə kom'pleks, (psychol) n the attachment of a daughter to her father, with hostility to her mother. [From the Greek story of Electra, who helped to avenge her mother's murder of her father]

electret i-lek'trit, (elec) n a permanently polarized (piece of) dielectric material. [*Electr*icity and magn*et*] electric i-lek'trik, adj relating to electricity; charged with or capable of being charged with electricity; producing or produced by, conveying, operated by or making use of electricity; thrilling (fig); full of tension and expectation, as though charged with electricity; producing a sudden startling effect. — n a non-conductor of electricity, such as amber, glass, etc, capable of being electrified by friction. — adj elec'trical. — n pl (finance) shares in electricity companies. — adv elec'trically. — n electrician (el-ik-trish'ən) someone who studies or is trained in the science of electricity; someone who makes, installs or repairs electrical apparatus. — n electricity (el-ik-tris'i-ti) the magnetic power of amber and other substances when rubbed; an imaginary fluid supposed to explain this and related phenomena; the manifestation of a form of energy associated with separation or movement of charged particles, such as electrons and protons; the science that deals with this; an electric charge or current; a feeling of excitement. — n electrīzā'tion or -s-. — vt elec'trize or -ise to electrify. — electrical engineer a specialist in the practical applications of electricity as a branch of engineering; electrical engineering; electric arc a luminous space between electrodes when a current passes across; electric battery a group of cells connected in series or in parallel for generating an electric current by chemical action; electric blanket a blanket incorporating an electric element, used for warming a bed; electric blue a vividly bright blue colour; electric calamine the mineral hemimorphite, which becomes positively electrified at one end and negatively at the other when its temperature rises, and vice versa as it cools; electric chair in the US, the seat on which a condemned criminal is put to death by electrocution; (with the) execution by electrocution in this manner; electric eel a cyprinoid fish, Electrophorus electricus, of S America, shaped like an eel and able to give powerful electric shocks by means of an electric organ in its long tail; electric eye a photoelectric cell; a miniature cathode ray tube; electric fence an electrically charged wire fence; electric field a region in which attracting or repelling forces are exerted on any electric charge present; electric fire, heater or radiator an apparatus using an electric current, for heating a room; electric furnace an apparatus for getting very high temperatures by means of an electric current; electric guitar a guitar with an electrical amplifying device; electric hare a dummy animal worked by electricity for racing greyhounds to chase; electric motor any device for converting electrical energy into mechanical energy; electric organ an organ in which the sound is produced by electrical devices instead of wind (music); in certain fishes, a structure that generates, stores and discharges electricity (zool); electric piano one in which the sounds are produced electrically; electric ray the fish Torpedo; electric seal dyed rabbit or hare skin; electric storm a violent disturbance in the electric condition of the atmosphere; electric torch a portable electric light. [L ēlectrum, from Gr ēlektron amber, in which electricity was first observed] electrify i-lek'tri-fī, vt to introduce electricity into, to charge with electricity; to adapt to electricity as the motive power; to excite suddenly; to astonish: — prp elec'trifying; pat and pap elec'trified. — adj elec'trifiable. — n electrificā'tion. [L electrum and facere to make]

electro- i-lek'trō- or el-ik-tro', combining form denoting electric or electrolytic. — n elec'tro (colloq) short for electroplate and electrotype: — pl elec'tros. — n sing electroacous'tics the technology of converting acoustic energy into electrical energy and vice versa. — adj electroacous'tic. — n electro-ac'upuncture an acupuncture technique in which electrical currents, of frequencies and amplitudes varied according to the effects required, are passed between pairs of inserted acupuncture needles. — n electroanal'ysis separation by electrolysis. — adj electroanalyt'ical. — n electrobiol'ogist. — n electrobiol'ogy the science of the electrical phenomena in living organisms; an old name for hypnotism. — n electrocar'diogram a photographic record of the electrical variations that occur during contraction of the muscle of the heart. — n electrocar'diograph a galvanometer used for making such records. — n electrocardiog'raphy the study of electric currents produced during muscular activity of the heart. — n electrocement' cement made in an electric furnace by adding lime to molten slag. — adj electrochem'ic or electrochem'ical. — n electrochem'ist. — n electrochem'istry the study of the relation between electricity and chemical change. — adj electroconvuls'ive. — electroconvulsive therapy shock therapy (abbrev ECT). — n elec'troculture the cultivation of plants under the stimulus of electricity. — vt elec'trocute to inflict a death penalty by means of electrocution; to kill by electricity. — n electrocū'tion. — n elec'trōde (Gr hodos way) a conductor by which a current of electricity enters or leaves an electrolytic cell, gas discharge tube or thermionic valve. — n electrodeposi'tion deposition of a layer of metal by electrolysis. — n sing electrodynam'ics the study of electricity in motion, or of the interaction of currents and currents, or currents and magnets. — n electrodynamom'eter an instrument for measuring electric currents by the attraction or repulsion between current-bearing coils. — n electroenceph'alogram (-sef' or -kef') a record made by an electroenceph'alograph, an instrument recording small electrical impulses produced by the brain. — n electroencephalog'raphy. — n electroextrac'tion or electrowinn'ing the recovery of a metal from its salts by passing an electric current through a solution. — n elec'troforming (electronics) electrodeposition of copper on stainless steel formers to obtain waveguide components. — n elec'trogen a molecule which emits electrons when it is illuminated. — n electrogen'esis the production of electricity, esp in living cells, etc. — adj electrogen'ic producing electricity; of or capable of electrogenesis. — n electrogild'ing electroplating with gold. — n elec'trograph a recording electrometer. — n electrog'raphy. — electrohydraulic forming shaping a piece of metal with a die by means of a shock wave in water set up by discharge of energy between immersed electrodes. — n sing electrokinet'ics the branch of science that deals with the distribution of electric currents. — n electrolier (-lēr') an electric-light fixture resembling a chandelier. — n electrol'ogy the science of electricity; electrotherapy. — n electroluminesc'ence luminescence produced by the application of an electric field to a dielectric phosphor. — electrolyse, etc see separate entry. — n electromag'net a piece of soft iron, etc, made magnetic by a current of electricity passing through a coil of wire wound round it. — adj electromagnet'ic of or relating to an electromagnet or electromagnetism. — electromagnetic interaction (phys) an interaction between charged elementary particles intermediate in strength between strong and weak interactions, completed in about 10^{-18}s. — electromagnetic theory Clerk Maxwell's theory explaining light in terms of electromagnetic waves. — electromagnetic unit any unit, such as the abampere or abvolt, in a centimetre-gram-second system of units based on the magnetic forces exerted by electric currents. — electromagnetic wave a travelling disturbance in space produced by the acceleration of an electric charge, comprising an electric field and a magnetic field at right angles to each other, both moving at the same velocity in a direction normal to the plane of the two fields. — n electromag'netism a branch of science dealing with the relation between, and properties of, electric and magnetic force. — adj electromechan'ical of or relating to any mechanical process or device involving the use of electricity; of or relating to electromechanics. — adv electromechan'ically. — n sing electromechan'ics the mechanics of the electric circuit. — n elec'tromer a substance showing electromerism. — adj electromer'ic. — n electrom'erism (chem) a form of tautomerism caused by a redistribution of electrons among the atoms of a molecule or group. — adj electrometallur'gical. — n electromet'allurgist (or -al'). — n electromet'allurgy (or -al') the industrial working of metals by means of electricity. — n electrom'eter an instrument for measuring difference of electric potential. — adj electromet'ric or electromet'rical. — adv electromet'rically. — n electrom'etry the science of electrical measurements. — adj electromō'tive of or relating to the motion of electricity or the laws governing it. — electromotive force difference of potential or the force generated by this, being the force of an electric current (also called electromō'tance). — n electromō'tor an apparatus for applying electricity as a motive power. — n electromy'ograph an instrument for recording voltages produced by muscular contraction. — n electromyog'raphy the study of electric currents set up in muscles by their functioning. — adj electroneg'ative carrying a negative charge; tending to form negative ions. — n electronegativ'ity an electronegative state; the power of eg an atom to attract electrons. — n electronystagmog'raphy (see nystagmus) the recording of eye movement by electronic means in medical diagnosis. — adj electro-op'tic or electro-op'tical. — electro-optical effect see Kerr effects. — n sing electro-op'tics the study of the effects that an electric field has on light crossing it. — n electro-osmo'sis movement of liquid under an applied electric field through a fine tube or membrane. — n elec'trophile an electrophilic substance. — adj electrophil'ic having or involving an affinity for electrons (ie for negative charge), electron-seeking. — n electrophorē'sis (Gr phoreein to bear) migration of suspended particles such as protein macromolecules under the influence of an electric field. — adj electrophoretic (-et'ik) of or relating to electrophoresis. — n electroph'orus an instrument for obtaining static electricity by means of induction. — n electrophotog'raphy photography by means of electric rather than chemical processes, as in xerography. — adj electrophotograph'ic. — adj electrophysiolog'ical. — n electrophysiol'ogist. — n electrophysiol'ogy the study of electric phenomena of living organisms. — vt elec'troplate to plate or cover, esp with silver, by electrolysis. — n electroplated ware. — n elec'troplater. — n elec'troplating. — adj electropō'lar having, as an electrical conductor, one end or surface positive and the other negative. — adj electropos'itive carrying a positive charge; tending to form positive ions. — n elec'troscope an instrument for detecting the presence of electricity in a body and the nature of it. — adj electroscop'ic. — n elec'troshock an electric shock. — n elec'trosonde a sonde for measuring atmospheric electricity. — adj electrostat'ic of or relating to electricity at rest. — electrostatic unit any unit, such as the statampere and statvolt, in a centimetre-gram-second system of units based on the forces of repulsion existing between static electric charges. — adv electrostat'ically. — n sing electrostat'ics the branch of science concerned with electricity at rest. — n sing electrotech'nics (also electrotechnol'ogy) electric technology. — n sing electrotherapeu'tics (also electrother'apy) that branch of medicine in which electrotherapy is used. — n electrother'apy the use of electrical currents or impulses to treat disease, ease pain, accelerate healing, restore muscle function, etc. — adj electrotherm'al or electrotherm'ic of or relating to electricity and heat, or heat obtained electrically. — n sing electrotherm'ics. — n electrotherm'y. — n elec'trotint a printing block produced by drawing with varnish on a metal plate, and depositing metal electrically on the parts not covered. — adj electroton'ic. — n electrot'onus the state of a nerve subjected to a steady discharge of electricity. — n elec'trotype a printing plate made by electrolytically coating a mould with copper; a facsimile of a coin made by this process. — Also adj. — n elec'trotyper a person who makes electrotypes. — adj electrotyp'ic. — n elec'trotypist. — n elec'trotypy. — n elec'trovalency union within a chemical compound achieved by transfer of electrons, the resulting ions being held together by electrostatic attraction (cf covalency). — adj elec'trovalent. — n electrowinning see electroextraction. [Gr ēlektro, combining form of ēlektron (see electron)] electrolyse or electrolyze il-ek'trə-līz, vt to break down by electrolysis; to subject to electrolysis. — n electrolysis (-trol'i-sis) decomposition by electric current, with migration of ions shown by changes at the electrodes; the removal of hair by applying an electrically charged needle to the follicle. — n elec'trolyte (-līt) a substance able to be broken down by electrolysis. — adj electrolytic (-lit'ik). — adv electrolyt'ically. [electro- and Gr lysis loosing] electron i-lek'tron, n a natural alloy of gold and silver used in ancient times (also Latinized as elec'trum); a minute particle charged with electricity, or a unit charge having inertia, normally forming part of an atom but capable of isolation as in cathode rays. — electron camera any device that converts an optical image into a corresponding electric current directly by electronic means; electron capture the capture of an electron by the nucleus of its own atom, the change of a proton into a neutron decreasing by one the atomic number of the atom; electron diffraction the diffraction of a beam of electrons by crystal, used in the study of crystal structures; electron gun the assembly of electrodes in a cathode ray tube which produces the electron beam; electron lens a device for focusing an electron beam; electron micrograph a photograph obtained by substituting a photographic plate for the fluorescent viewing screen of an electron microscope; electron microscope a microscope that makes use of a beam of electrons instead of light; electron optics the study of the effects of electric and magnetic fields on the direction of beams of electrons; electron pair a duplet; an electron and a positron; electron probe an X-ray device that bombards the specimen under examination with a very narrow beam of electrons, allowing non-destructive analysis; electron ring accelerator an accelerator in which an intense ring of circulating electrons, being accelerated, can carry along and accelerate protons or stripped ions; electron shell a group of electrons surrounding a nucleus of an atom and having adjacent energy levels; electron telescope an optical instrument with electronic image converter used with a normal telescope; electron tube an electronic device in which the electron conduction is in a vacuum or gas inside a gas-tight enclosure, eg a thermionic valve; elec'tron-volt a unit of energy equal to that acquired by an electron when accelerated by a potential of one volt. [Gr ēlektron amber]

electronic el-, il- or ēl-ik-tron'ik, adj of or relating to electronics or electrons; worked or produced by devices made according to the principles of electronics; concerned with or working with such devices. — n pl electron'ics (colloq) electronic products and data collectively. — adv electron'ically. — n sing electron'ics the science and technology of the conduction of electricity in a vacuum, a gas or a semiconductor; the devices, etc based on this. — electronic brain any electronic computer; electronic countermeasures (military) the use of electronic systems and reflectors to impair the effectiveness of enemy guidance, surveillance or navigational equipment; electronic data processing (comput) the storage and manipulation of electronic data; electronic flash an extremely intense and brief flash for high-speed photography produced by passing an electric charge through a gas-filled tube; the apparatus for producing it; electronic mail the sending and receiving of messages by any electronic means; electronic mailbox a section of a central computer's memory reserved for a particular individual, into which messages can be directed; electronic music music made by arranging electronically produced sounds either directly from a keyboard, etc, or previously generated in the laboratory and recorded on tape (cf musique concrète); electronic organ (music) an organ in which the sound is produced electronically; electronic piano a kind of synthesizer; electronic publishing the publishing of information such as text and graphics in machine-readable forms; electronic tagging a monitoring system allowing the supervision of an offender outside prison by means of an electronic tag (eg a bracelet or anklet fitted with a transmitter) which maintains regular signals to a central computer. — electronic funds transfer (system) a method whereby financial credits and debits are transferred electronically (between banks and shops, etc) by computer network (at point of sale signifying such a system in operation at a shop checkout, etc. enabling payment by debit or credit card rather than by cash or cheque); electronic point of sale (at shop checkouts) a computerized till system in which a cash till with a bar-code reader is directly linked to a stock control system. [Ety as for electron] electrophoresis... to ...electrowinning. See electro-.

electrum. See electron.

electuary i-lek'tū-ər-i, n a medicine mixed with honey or syrup. [LL ēlectuārium, perh from Gr ekleikton from ekleichein to lick up] eleemosynary el-ē-moz', el-i-ē-moz'i-nər-i, or -mos', adj relating to charity or almsgiving; dependent on charity; of the nature of alms. [Gr eleēmosynē alms, from eleos pity; see alms] elegant el'i-gənt, adj pleasing to good or fastidious taste; very careful or ornate in dress; graceful in form and movement; refined and luxurious; (of style) polished; (of apparatus or work in science or mathematics) simple and effective; excellent (colloq). — n el'egance or el'egancy the state or quality of being elegant; the finest propriety of manners (archaic); refinement; an exemplification of elegance. — adv el'egantly. [Fr, from L ēlegāns, -antis, from ē from, and root of legere to choose] elegit i-lē'jit or ā-lā'git, (law) n a writ of execution, abolished in England in 1956, whereby a debtor's property and lands could be delivered to the plaintiff until the debt was satisfied by profits, rents, etc. [L, he has chosen, from eligere to choose] on a lavatory which is operated to release a flow of water to clean the pan; a sudden growth; a renewal of growth; a rush of feeling; a puddle (obs); a watery place near a spring, etc (obs); bloom, freshness or vigour; abundance. — vi to glow; to become red in the face; to flow swiftly, suddenly or copiously. — vt to cleanse by a copious flow of water (as in a lavatory); to clear by a blast of air; to cause to glow; to elate or excite the spirits of. — adj overflowing; abounding; well supplied, esp with money (colloq); in full bloom (Shakesp); flushed. — adj flushed suffused with ruddy colour; excited. — n flush'er a person who flushes sewers. — n flush'ing. — n flush'ness. — adj flush'y reddish. — flush'-box a tank for flushing a lavatory, a cistern. — in the (or one's) first flush young or youthful; in the first flush of in the early stages of (esp youth), when one is at a peak of vigour, enthusiasm, etc. [Prob flush[2] influenced by flash and blush] flush[2] flush, vi to start like an alarmed bird. — vt to rouse and cause (esp birds) to move off; to force out of concealment (with out). — n the act of starting (esp birds); a bird or a flock of birds so started (Spenser). [Prob onomatopoeic; suggested by fly, flutter and rush[1]] flush[3] flush, vt to make even; to fill up to the level of a surface (often with up). — adj having the surface in the same plane as the adjacent surface (with with); (of a deck) having the same level throughout the ship's length. — Also adv. [Prob related to flush[1]] flush[4] flush, n a hand in which all the cards or a specified number are of the same suit. — adj (poker) consisting of cards all of the same suit. — busted flush a flush that is never completed (poker); something that has to be abandoned as a failure (fig); straight flush (poker) a sequence of five cards of the same suit (royal flush, if headed by the ace). [Prob Fr flux, from L fluxus flow; influenced by flush[1]] fluster flus'tər, n hurrying; flurry; heat (obs); confused agitation. — vt to confuse; to make hot and flurried; to fuddle with drink. — vi to bustle; to be agitated or fuddled. — n flus'terment. — adj flus'tery confused. — vt flus'trate (obs) to fluster. — n flustrā'tion (obs). [ON flaustr hurry]

flute flōōt, n a wind instrument, esp either of two types consisting of a wooden or metal tube with holes stopped by the fingertips or by keys, one type blown from the end through a fipple, the other (also called transverse flute) held horizontally and played by directing the breath across a mouth-hole; (in organ-building) a stop with stopped wooden pipes, having a flute-like tone; a longitudinal groove, such as on a pillar (archit); a tall, narrow wine-glass; a shuttle in tapestry-weaving, etc. — vi to play the flute; to make fluty sounds. — vt to play or sing in soft flute-like tones; to form flutes or grooves in (archit). — adj flut'ed ornamented with flutes, channels or grooves. — n flut'er. — n flutina (-tē') a kind of accordion. — n flut'ing flute-playing or similar sounds; longitudinal grooving. — n flut'ist same as flautist. — adj flut'y like a flute in tone. — flûte-à-bec (flüt-ä-bek; Fr) a fipple-flute, a recorder or flageolet; flute'-bird a piping crow, an Australian bird of the shrike family; flute'mouth a fish (Fistularia) similar to the sticklebacks. [OFr fleüte; ety dubious] flutter flut'ər, vi to move about nervously, aimlessly or bustlingly; (of a bird) to flap wings; (of a flag, etc) to flap in the air; to vibrate or, eg of a pulse, to beat irregularly; to be agitated or uncertain; to be frivolous (obs); to toss a coin (archaic). — vt to throw into disorder; to move in quick motions. — n quick, irregular motion; agitation; confusion; a bet or wager (colloq); a small speculation (colloq); (in wind-instrument playing) rapid movement of the tongue as for a rolled 'r' (also flutt'er-tonguing); (in sound reproduction) undesirable variation in pitch or loudness; abnormal oscillation of a part of an aircraft. [OE flotorian to float about, from the root of flēotan to float] fluvial flōō'vi-əl, adj of, belonging to, found or occurring in rivers. — n flu'vialist a person stressing the role of rivers in the explanation of phenomena. — adj fluviat'ic or flu'viatile (-tīl or -til) belonging to or formed by rivers. — adj fluvio-glā'cial relating to glacial rivers. [L fluviālis, from fluvius a river, and fluere to flow] flux fluks, n (an) act of flowing; a flow of matter; a state of flow or continuous change; a discharge generally from a mucous membrane (med); matter discharged; excrement (euphem); an easily fused substance, esp one added to another to make it more easily soldered; the rate of flow of mass, volume or energy (phys). — vt to melt; to apply flux to when soldering. — vi to flow; to fuse. — n fluxion (fluk'shən) a flowing or discharge; excessive flow of blood or fluid to any organ (med); a difference or variation; the rate of change of a continuously varying quantity (math); (in pl) the name given by Newton to that branch of mathematics which with a different notation (developed by Leibniz) is known as differential and integral calculus. — adj flux'ional or flux'ionary (archaic) variable; inconstant. — n flux'ionist a person skilled in fluxions. — adj flux'ive (Shakesp) flowing with tears. — flux density (phys) the number of photons (or particles) passing through unit area normal to a beam, or the energy of the radiation passing through this area. — in a state of flux in an unsettled, undetermined state. [OFr, from L fluxus, from fluere to flow]

fly flī, vi to move through the air, esp on wings or in aircraft; to operate an aircraft; to move swiftly; to hurry; to pass quickly; to flee; to burst quickly or suddenly; to flutter. — vt to avoid or flee from; to cause (eg a kite, aircraft, etc) to fly; to conduct or transport by air; to cross or pass by flying: — pr p fly'ing; pa t flew (flōō); pa p flown (flōn); 3rd sing present indicative flies. — n any insect of the order Diptera; often so widely used, esp in composition (eg butterfly, dragonfly, mayfly) as to be virtually equivalent to insect; a fish-hook dressed so as to imitate a fly; collectively, an insect pest; a familiar spirit (archaic); an attendant parasite (obs); a flight; a flap, esp a tent-door; a flap of material covering eg a trouser opening; a trouser fastener, eg a zip; the free end of a flag, or anything similar; a fast stagecoach (hist); a light vehicle on hire, at first drawn by a man, later by a horse (hist); a flywheel; (in pl) the large space above the proscenium in a theatre, from which the scenes, etc are controlled: — pl flies. — adj (slang) knowing; surreptitious or sly. — n flier or flyer (flī'ər) a person who flies or flees; an aircraft pilot; an object, eg a train, moving at top speed; an ambitious person, esp one for whom fast promotion in the workplace is assured (also high-flī'er or high-fly'er); a usu risky financial speculation (slang); a part of a machine which moves rapidly; a rectangular step in stairs; a flying leap (colloq); a (usu single-sheet) promotional leaflet used (esp as an insert to other printed material) for advertising purposes. — adj fly'able (of weather) in which it is safe to fly; (of an aircraft) able, or fit, to be flown. — n fly'ing. — adj that flies or can fly; moving or passing very rapidly; organized for speedy action or transfer to any location as the need arises; (of a visit) very brief. — fly agaric a poisonous type of toadstool, Amanita muscaria, used in the production of flypaper and having hallucinogenic properties; fly ash fine particles of ash released into the air during eg the burning of fossil fuels in power stations, also used in brick-making and as a partial substitute for cement in concrete. — adj fly'away streaming; flighty; (of hair) too fine to hold a style for long. — fly'bane poison for flies; a name for various plants used for this; fly'belt a belt of country infested by tsetse fly. — adj fly'-bitten marked by, or as if by, the bites of flies. — fly'blow the egg of a fly, esp when found in meat — adj fly'-blown tainted with flies' eggs or maggots (also fig). — fly'boat a long, narrow, swift boat used on canals; fly'book a case like a book for holding fishing-flies; fly'-by a flight, at low altitude or close range, past a place, or a body in space, for observation; fly'-by-night a person who gads about at night; an absconding debtor; an irresponsible person. — adj irresponsible, esp in business matters; unreliable; transitory. — adj fly-by-wire' (of the control systems of an aircraft) controlled by computer and operated electronically, not mechanically. — fly'catcher a name for various birds that catch flies on the wing; fly cemetery (humorous) a cake, biscuit or pastry containing currants; fly'-dressing fly-tying; fly'-drive a package holiday in which the rental of a car, etc is included and the vehicle collected at the destination. — Also adj. — fly'-dumping fly-tipping. — vi fly'-fish to fish using artificial flies as lure. — fly'-fisher; fly'-fishing; fly'-flap a fly swat (see below); fly'-flapper; fly front a concealed fastening on a jacket, shirt, etc. — adj fly-front'ed. — fly-half' (Rugby football) a stand-off half; flying bedstead a testing framework resembling a bedstead in shape, that can be raised vertically from the ground by a jet engine; flying boat a seaplane with a boat's body; flying bomb a bomb in the form of an unpiloted jet-propelled aeroplane; [Gr geōgraphiā, from gē earth, and graphein to write] geoid jē'oid, n the figure of the earth's mean sea-level surface assumed to be continued under the land, approximately an oblate ellipsoid of revolution. — adj geoid'al. [Gr geōdēs, geoeidēs earthlike, from gē earth, and eidos form] geol. abbrev: geologic, geological; geology.

geolatry jē-ol'ə-tri, (rare) n earth-worship. [Gr gē earth, and latreiā worship] geolinguistics jē-ō-ling-gwis'tiks, n sing the study of language in relation to geography. [geo-] geology jē-ol'ə-ji, n the science relating to the history and development of the earth's crust, with its successive floras and faunas. — adj geologic (-loj'ik) or geolog'ical. — adv geolog'ically. — n geol'ogist, also (now rare) geologian (jē-ə-lō'ji-ən) or geol'oger. — vi geol'ogize or -ise to work at geology in the field. — vt to investigate the geology of. — geological column a diagram showing the subdivisions of part or all of geological time or the stratigraphical sequence in a particular area; geological time time before written history, divided into epochs in each of which one of the great rock systems was formed. — dynamical or dynamic geology the study of the work of natural agents in shaping the earth's crust (wind, frost, rivers, volcanic action, etc); structural geology the study of the arrangement and structure of rock masses. [Fr géologie, from Gr gē earth, and logos a discourse] geomagnetism jē-ō-mag'nət-izm, n the magnetism of the earth, earth's magnetic field; the study of this. — adj geomagnet'ic. — n geomag'netist. [geo-] geomancy jē'ō-man-si, n divination by shapes formed, eg when earth is thrown down on to a surface; divination by shapes formed by linking random dots made on paper. — n gē'omancer. — n gē'omant (rare). — adj geoman'tic. [Gr gē earth, and manteiā divination] geomedicine jē-ō-med'sin, n the study of diseases as influenced by geographical environment. — adj geomed'ical. [geo-] geometry jē-om'i-tri, n that part of mathematics which deals with the properties of points, lines, surfaces and solids, either under classical Euclidean assumptions, or (in the case of elliptic, hyperbolic, etc geometry) involving postulates not all of which are identical with Euclid's; any study of a mathematical system in which figures undergo transformations, concerned with discussion of those properties of the figures which remain constant; a textbook of geometry (archaic). — n geom'eter a geometrician; a geometrid caterpillar or moth. — adj geometric (-met') or geomet'rical relating to or according to geometry; (eg of a pattern, design or composition) consisting of or using simple figures such as geometry deals with. — adv geomet'rically. — n geometrician (-me-trish'ən) a person skilled in geometry. — n geom'etrid any moth of the family or superfamily Geomet'ridae whose caterpillars are loopers. — n geom'etrist. — n geometrīzā'tion or -s-. — vt and vi geom'etrize or -ise to work geometrically; to show in geometric form. — geometrical progression a series of quantities each of which has the same ratio to its predecessor; geometric mean see under mean[2]. [Gr geōmetriā, from gē earth, and metron a measure] geomorphogeny jē-ō-mōr-foj'ən-i, n the scientific study of the origins and development of land forms. — adj geomorphogē'nic. — n geomorphog'enist. [geo-] geomorphology jē-ō-mōr-fol'ə-ji, n the morphology and development of land forms, including those under the sea; the study of this. — adj geomorpholog'ic or geomor- pholog'ical. — adv geomorpholog'ically. — n geomorphol'ogist. [geo-]

Geomys jē'ō-mis, n the typical genus of Geomyidae (-mī'i-dē), the pouched rats, a family of American burrowing rodents with outward-opening cheekpouches. — adj geomy'oid. [Gr gē earth, and mȳs mouse] geophagy jē-of'ə-ji, (biol) n earth-eating, the practice of feeding on soil. — Also geoph'agism. — n geoph'agist. — adj geoph'agous (-gəs). [Gr gē earth, and phagein to eat] geophilous jē-of'il-əs, (biol) adj living in or on the ground; geocarpic; having a short stem with leaves at ground-level. — adj geophil'ic. [Gr gē earth, and phileein to love] geophone jē'ə-fōn, n (usu in pl) a device for detecting sound waves, shock waves, etc in the ground. [Gr gē earth, and phōnē voice, sound] geophysics gē-ō-fiz'iks, n sing the physics of the earth, the study of the earth's physical properties. — adj geophys'ical. — n geophys'icist (-i-sist). [geo-] geophyte jē'ō-fīt, (bot) n a plant that survives the winter by having subterranean buds, eg bulbs, corms or rhizomes. — adj geophytic (-fit'ik). [Gr gē earth, and phyton plant] geopolitics jē-ō-pol'it-iks, n sing a science concerned with problems of states, such as frontiers, as affected by their geographical environment; the special combination of geographical and political considerations in a particular state; a Nazi doctrine justifying expansion by necessity for Lebensraum, etc. — adj geopolit'ical. — adv geopolit'ically. — n geopoliti'cian. [Ger Geopolitik; see geo-] geoponic jē-ō-pon'ik, or geoponical -əl, adj agricultural. — n sing geopon'ics the science of agriculture. [Gr geōponikos, from gē earth, and ponos labour]

Geordie jör'di, n a native of Tyneside; the dialect of Tyneside; a Scotsman (Austr and NZ); a coal-miner; a coal-carrying boat; a guinea, from the figure of St George; a safety lamp for miners invented by George Stephenson. — adj relating to Tyneside, its people, dialect, accent or culture. georgic jör'jik, adj (obs) relating to agriculture or rustic affairs. — n a poem on husbandry or rural affairs, after Virgil's poetic work in four books on that theme, the Georgics. [L geōrgicus, from Gr geōrgikos, from geōrgiā agriculture, from gē earth, and ergon work] geoscience jē'ō-sī-əns, n any of the scientific disciplines, such as geology or geomorphology, which deal with the earth, or all of these collectively. — adj geoscientif'ic. [geo-] geosphere jē'ō-sfēr, n the solid part of the earth, distinguished from atmosphere and hydrosphere. [Gr gē earth, and sphaira sphere] geostatic jē-ō-stat'ik, adj (of a construction) capable of sustaining the pressure of earth from all sides. — n sing geostat'ics the statics of rigid bodies. [Gr gē the earth, and statikos causing to stand] geostationary jē-ō-stā'shən-ə-ri, adj (of a satellite, etc) orbiting the earth in time with the earth's own rotation, ie circling it once every 24 hours, so remaining above the same spot on the earth's surface. [geo-] geostrategy jē-ō-strat'ə-ji, n global strategy, strategy dealing with geopolitical concerns. — adj geostratē'gic or geostratēg'ical. [geo-] geostrophic jē-ō-strof'ik, adj of a virtual force used to account for the change in direction of the wind relative to the surface of the earth arising from the earth's rotation; of a wind whose direction and force are partly determined by the earth's rotation. [Gr gē earth, and strophē a turn] geosynchronous jē-ō-sing'krə-nəs, adj (of a satellite, etc) geostationary. [geo-] geosyncline jē-ō-sin'klīn, (geol) n a syncline on a great scale. — adj geosynclī'nal. [geo-]

geotaxis jē-ō-taks'is, (biol) n response of an organism to the stimulus of gravity. — adj geotact'ic or geotact'ical. — adv geotact'ically. [Gr gē earth, and taxis arrangement] geotechnics jē-ō-tek'niks, n sing the application of scientific and engineering principles to the solution of civil-engineering and other problems created by the nature and constitution of the earth's crust. — adj geotech'nic or geotech'nical. — n geotechnol'ogy the application of science and technology to the extraction and use of the earth's natural resources. — adj geotechnolog'ical. [geo-] geotectonic jē-ō-tek-ton'ik, adj relating to the structure of rock masses. — n sing geotecton'ics structural geology. [Gr gē earth, and tektōn a builder] geothermic jē-ō-thûr'mik, or geothermal -thûr'məl, adj relating to or heated by the internal heat of the earth. — n geothermom'eter an instrument for measuring subterranean temperatures. — geothermal energy energy extracted from the earth's natural heat, ie from hot springs and certain kinds of rock; geothermal gradient the rate at which the temperature of the earth's crust increases with depth. [Gr gē earth, and thermē heat] geotropism jē-ot'rop-izm, (bot) n geotaxis (positive downwards, towards the centre of the earth, negative upwards, away from the centre of the earth). — adj geotrop'ic. — adv geotrop'ically. [Gr gē earth, and tropos a turning]

Ger. abbrev: German; Germany.

ger. abbrev: gerund; gerundive.

gerah gē'rä, (antiq; Bible) n the smallest Hebrew weight and coin, 1/20 of a shekel. [Heb gērāh] geraniol gə-rān'i-ol, or -rān', n an alcohol ($C_{10}H_{18}O$) forming a constituent of many of the esters used in perfumery. [Ger; geranium and chem sfx -ol, representing alcohol] geranium ji-rān'yəm, n a plant of the genus Geranium with seed-vessels like a crane's bill, typical of the family Geraniaceae (-i-ā'si-ē); (loosely) any cultivated plant of the genus Pelargonium. [L, from Gr geranion, from geranos a crane] gerbe jûrb, n a wheatsheaf (obs or heraldry); a fountain or firework resembling a wheatsheaf (obs). [Fr gerbe; cf garb[2]] gerbera gûr'bə-rə, or jûr', n a plant belonging to the Gerbera genus of composite plants of S Africa, etc. [T Gerber, German naturalist] gerbil jûr'bil, n a small desert-dwelling rodent capable of causing great damage to crops but often kept as a pet. — Also jer'bil and (esp formerly) ger'bille. [Fr gerbille] gere (Spenser). Same as gear.

gerent jē'rənt, or jer', (rare) n a controller, ruler. [L gerēns, -entis, pr p of gerere to manage] gerenuk ge'rə-nōōk, n a long-legged, long-necked antelope of E Africa (Litocranius walleri). [From the Somali name] gerfalcon. See gyrfalcon.
